NOTES ON RUSSIAN LIFE

Time passed, as time will pass even to those who are compelled to conceal comic stories, the morals of which are of most serious sort, and I lost sight of Blagovest altogether. But I often thought of him and heeded his words of warning to me "I have let me." I thought, "be anything that fate may will on us this affinity and ever changing way; but oh, kind Providence, prevent my ever being rowdy!" And, keeping this invocation constantly in mind, I went my way, and gradually acquired a reputation for gentleness which more than made up for many mental and physical shortcomings.

Someone has said that "the world is so girls again, and in far better society than that where I had at first encountered him. I had gone on progressing, and my politeness and prospects had increased extensively by the time I was as I may say, pulled up by finding Boggins an honored guest in a circle I then entered for the first time, but into which I had been long striving to get. I soon made myself acquainted with the group, to whom I had been introduced, and, to prove the old proverb of yore, and wondering how the good old families but would crack on my ear with reference to Boggins.

I was astonished, however, at the difference in his demeanor. No longer the same frank, hearty, out-spokenness I so well remembered; no more the cheery voice and warm clasp of the hand. Except that the face and form, and name were the same, and that he had been the same, I could not remember him. The stranger, however, Boggins was as he himself.

Yet, strangely to say, no one had his praises more, persistently sung that day and where ber, it is not unpalatable, and ding dish, the habit grows up as if to make the mockery more complete, people never seemed tired of singing his psalms. Their goodness, cleverness, kindness, and, above all, gentlemanliness the most refined, were chief. But no one ever spoke of his doing any particularly kind action at any specified time, and as to his cleverness, except for what I remember of him, a dozen years before, he might have been a born booby.

The lady bothered me completely, but as I was as polite as Elgins himself, I might have remained ignorant of how all this change was till now had not accident helped me. One night, coming away together from er, and the middle classes in general reaching his chambers he asked me to stop in. In I went, and the door was hardly shut when he remarked with a bitter abruptness I shall never forget,—

"You see a great change in me, eh? I am no longer the dashing, clever, devil-mc-care, enthusiastic young rascal of a dozen years ago, about whom every body had a sneer. Would you like to know why I am so well received now?"

I murmured assent, and he went on.—

"When you knew me a dozen years back, I had no thought but for those whom I called my friends. I never allowed a man to be maligning. I considered it ever my duty to defend the absent at any cost. I minutes before, rather than after, the mentioned in the card. The men de not mention now. The result was, that because I was outspoken, and honest, and generous, and just—the result was, as you must well remember; I was considered coarse and rowdy.

"And now," the speaker on his face was something to see and remember—"and now your behavior me!" For twelve years I have never said any good to anybody but I. I have sworn to be dead to any call but that of self. I have lived for self alone. I have stood by and never interfered to prevent the breath of slander tainting her fame. I have never contributed to any but the best advertised charity fairs. In fact, I have done nothing that is generous and many things that are mean.

"And if people want to get on in the world they must follow this last example."

THE LIVING WHALE IN LONDON.
A fine young whale of the white species, months ago, with a view to exhibiting at the forthcoming Westmanster, has been successfully immersed in a vat tank which had been constructed for its reception there. The whale is in perfect condition, and, being the first living specimen of its kind ever brought to Europe, may be expected to become an object of extreme interest to the British public. This undertaking is not only remarkable for its absolute novelty, but for the wonderful expedition and the thorough success with which it has been carried out. It was only on the 12th inst. that the whale was landed at the wharf, and the arrangements for its reception were made and completed by telegraph, and the huge tank for the reception of the animal and the excursions and other works incidentally necessary.

MUSCULAR ETHICS.

"Benjamin," said the curate to him one sunny Sunday after the morning service, "I am sure you must be grieved for your father." "Grieved for my father!" enquired the son, to the amazement of the clergyman; "why?" "Why?" echoed the clergyman, "because for one thing he never comes to church, and for another, cock-fighting is a debasing sin—it is a sin against society, but to fight cocks on the Sabbath-day is a crime against God—and you know that."

Benjamin looked the well-dressed, clear-spoken man in the face, and could not say a word. Like all ill-used young creatures smarting under a sudden injustice which he could and his face assumed a look of blank astonish-gentleness, perceiving this, and altogether not mistaking the meaning, took Benjamin by the right hand, called him by his Christian name, and said, "I said farewell in a set tone, besought him to go home and pray for his father, and so I left him." On his way down Snowhill, Benjamin met a young man, the son of the same, and who belonged to his own class. The only difference in their appearance was that Benjamin pursued the life of a workman, and the other, the sons of the serving-maid of Missions, had grown up in his craft and gone into "warehouse." Benjamin said, "This youthful saint, he has been near," you must warn your father to be who had a quick eye and was as much moved by the expression of his mentor's face as he was to the allusion to his father, raised the first, struck him a round blow on the ear, and knocked him flat on his back. The other began to "cry out," or three of the besotted youths, who were within a few rods, began to "cry out" the affair from a distance, and ran up, in hope of an amusement at other people's expense. Neither of the youths wanted to fight, but Benjamin could now do no less than stand his ground, while the other unable to resist the urging of the little crowd, which had gathered round the combatants, squared up to Benjamin, and the fight began. It was over, and the winner of wrath to come got the prize. The violent infirmation of one of his boys, and a news seven times as big as his was want to be; and Benjamin rescued his home with his clothes much rumpled and his best trousers split at the knee. — Masson's Story.
